Bryan, gleeful.

Tom Lawson's most advertised book should find a ready sale to-day, "Friday, the 13th."

Montpelier might employ its local contingent of the Fat Men's club to sit on the lid Sunday and hold tight.

They are already demanding of him that he redeem his campaign promise. There's work ahead for Boston next mayor.

United States Senator William P. Livingston of Vermont yesterday reached his 66th birthday. Far from being an old man in years, he is a young man in spirits.

Some men of pills and anasthetics have a perverted sense of humor, even if not a queer sense of humor, as witness the statement of Dr. Rice, "It was a pretty little operation." In connection with a serious surgical attempt.

The Burlington Clipper, true to its graveyard environment, hurls a line of Latin at the St. Johnsbury Caledonian in defense of the comparison of Allen D. Fletcher of Cavendish, Vermont, and Charles E. Hughes, New York. As the result of the effort we confidently expect to see the Caledonian curl up and wither completely away.

Said the Vermont Grange, "Whereas, the present law regulating the traffic in intoxicating liquors increases drunkenness in all Vermont towns and in many no-licensing towns, etc." Among the "no" towns take, for instance, the capital city of Montpelier with a single arrest for intoxication in November. Look back, then, to prohibition days in Montpelier. Compare the two.

AN IL-TEMPERED ATTACK.

As the self-appointed critic of the Proctor family and thorough the conservator of some political state preferences for other families, the Rutland Herald has undoubtedly filled an important niche in journalistic life of Vermont. Much of its effort has been effectively put forward and some of it has been properly grounded, receiving approbation according as it merited. But the Herald's strained effort of yesterday to discredit Senator Redfield Proctor in connection with the gift of the state manatorium for tuberculosis at Pittsford was both poorly conceived and in miserably poor taste. Senator Proctor gives a quarter of a million to erect and endow a sanatorium for care of the state's sick; whereupon The Herald turns about and delivers itself of a most scathing personal attack, based on the assumption that he and his family have received everything of the largesses of the state and have given in return one sanatorium, and "one life of self-sacrificing devotion." Whatever feeling of personal vindictiveness The Herald may have against the Proctors, it belittled itself exceedingly in this ill-tempered exhibition of it in yesterday's issue.

ROOSEVELT'S FINAL WORD.

There will be, in spite of the general approval of his official acts, satisfaction that President Roosevelt has at this time reiterated his statement of November 8, 1901, that he would not be a candidate for chief executive of the nation again—satisfaction that a strong man has refused to go back on his pledged word, regardless of the tremendous pressure brought to bear, and satisfaction that a "wise custom" of limiting the term of the presidential service will thus not be violated.

As to the former, there has never been hint or suggestion from President Roosevelt himself that he had anything else in view other than a cleaving to the policy outlined for himself at the time of his present-term election. There has been a lot of twaddle said and written about conditions so shaping themselves that he would be required to run again for the office, etc., etc. But this has not emanated from himself. Rather should it be credited to theorists and visionaries. In fact, point to any statement of the president that even intimated he seriously considered the prospect of serving again. There hasn't been a single sentence to give that impression, except maybe an expressed desire for the continuance of his policies; which expression his enemies have twisted around into an itching for further personal aggrandizement. Even these will now perforce stop their barking. Roosevelt stands by the spirit and the very letter of his solemn promise.

Thus he will virtually have completed two terms as president in 1909, a limit placed on incumbency of the office since the first days of the republic. There is, of course, much that might be said about the advantage of keeping an honest, capable and energetic official in office. But that loses its practicality, even if its use is unimpaired, when it comes to the highest position in the land. And it does not mean that republicans are ungrateful when they decline to accept further service. Two terms—eight years—are enough for any one man to stand at the head of the United States. Anything further smacks of life tenure; and that is obnoxious to the theory of a republic. A long line of presidents have recognized the wisdom of a two-term limit, and the people have agreed with them. And now, even when we have a president of the character of President Roosevelt, we cannot with safety break the continuity of a "wise custom."

Gift to Miss Chestnut.

Hyde Park, Dec. 12.—On the completion of business at the morning session of county court yesterday, Col. E. B. Sawyer, the pastor of the Lamoille county bar, asked the indulgence of the court for a few minutes and then addressed Miss Chestnut, the court stenographer, saying that in view of her contemplated trip abroad the bar and officers of Lamoille county court wished to express their appreciation of her services and show their good will by presenting her with a token of their regard, and handed her a purse well filled with gold. In behalf of the court he wished her a pleasant visit abroad and a safe return to her home and her duties, which she is for a year, laying aside. Miss Chestnut responded very feelingly, thanking her friends for the gift and assured them that the occasion would always be happily remembered by her. Judge Hall asked a few remarks, and which he alluded to faithfulness and ability in the performance of her exacting duties and wished for her a most happy vacation.
